Capitol Comments

by Dan Daniels
Fifth District, Virginia

WASHINGTON – At this writing, with the completion of five legislative days, more than 2,000 public bills, private bills, and resolutions have been introduced. Many – in fact, most – of these bills were introduced in the 92nd Congress and, because they were not considered by the House, expired with adjournment. Thus they must be re-introduced, in order to be considered in this Congress.

Your Congressman has already sponsored a number of bills, and in addition is in the process of drafting additional legislation to be introduced within the very near future. A brief recap of the legislation, along with the reasoning behind it, is offered for your information.

Several bills have been prompted by recent actions of the federal courts.

Contrary to popular opinion, the Supreme Court in a recent ruling did not decide that capital punishment is unconstitutional. What they did rule is that capital punishment as it has been applied constitutes "cruel and unusual punishment", and therefore violates the Eighth Amendment. Because of the necessity for clarifying the law and punishment with regard to certain particularly abominable crimes, I will introduce legislation calling for a mandatory death penalty upon conviction for air piracy.

A second bill I will introduce will make assault on law enforcement officers on firemen in the lawful pursuit of their duties a federal offense, and further provide that upon conviction for murder under these conditions a mandatory death sentence be imposed. In the absence of men who will perform these publi c services, each home would become an armed fortress. No one wants that. At the very least, we must provide the means to protect those whom we expect to protect us.

Also court-related are two Resolutions I have sponsored. The first would amend the Constitution to require that Supreme Court justices and those of other federal courts be reconfirmed by the Senate every 8 years. It is the belief of many that justices, secure in the knowledge that they cannot be removed except under most unusual circumstances, assume to themselves the role of lawmaker – by – interpretation. This was never the intent of this nation's founders, and the trend must be reversed.

A second Resolution is brief, succinct, and to the point: "No public school student shall, because of his race, creed, or color, be assigned to or required to attend a particular school. The Congress shall have the power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation." Ipresent-day interpreters of the Constitution are correct – and I question that they are – and the Constitution prohibits freedom of choice in school attendance, then it is quite obviously the will of the people that the Constitution be amended in this manner.

One of the most disturbing trends of recent years, if continued could result that only the rich or the bought run for Congress. All costs have risen, but in this area costs have become bloated beyond belief. With the thought that one approach to the solution is to reduce the available funds – one would not spend what one does not have – I will introduce a bill identical to one Senator Harry F., Byrd, Jr., has introduced in the Senate, limiting the amount any individual can contribute to $25,000 in a federal election campaign.

An area of much publicized abuse insofar as Members of Congress are concerned is that of junketeering by "lame - ducks" at the taxpayers' expense. I have sponsored a bill which will require prior approval by House Resolution for travel by any Member who has announced his intention to retire or has been defeated in a primary or general election. There have been instances when travel by a Member who is not returning is amply justified. In 1968, Congressman Porter Hardy, who had announced his retirement from Virginia's 2nd District seat, was sent by Chairman Rivers of the Committee on Armed Services on a worldwide inspection tour. On the basis of Congressman Hardy's findings, literally millions of dollars were saved on the implementation of his recommendations by a Congress in which he did not sit.

These represent only a few of the bills I have sponsored. Later, I shall report on others. Mail to this office, which has been extremely heavy, has reflected interest in these and other matters, on which I shall report. One matter of concern has been the curtailment by several Department of Agriculture programs related to soil conservation and water resource improvement. I have written the President and the Secretary of Agriculture to urge restitution of these very valuable programs.

Tomorrow, Ruby and I will leave for Taipei, capitol of the Republic of China (not at taxpayer expense). Each year for several years, a Member of Congress has been invited to address a Freedom Day Rally on the island. Last year, the address was given by Se James L. Buckley of New Congressman Daniel u took a mission over the end to Culebra and Roos Roads. He traveled by mi aircraft. Mrs. Daniel, who to the area, traveled com cial at her own expense.

Major Changes In Robert E. Lee Conservation District

In 1972 the Robert E. Lee Soil and Water Conservation District initated some of the most drastic changes since its organization in 1940. On January 1, 1973, the five-county district divided and became two districts. Buckingham and Cumberland Counties formed a new Peter Francisco Soil and Water Conservation District. Lynchburg has joined with Amherst, Appomattox and Campbell Counties and will remain as the Robert E. Lee Soil and Water Conservation District. Reorganization of the districts was done after careful consideration. Conservation efforts can now be concentrated on local problems with more local people being involved. Since its conception the district has dealt mainly with individual land owners and land users. While the conservation needs of these individuals will be served, greater emphasis is being given to serving groups such as watershed associations and local units of government. More emphasis is to be placed on "the prevention rather than the cure".

Small watershed projects involving improved conservation on the land and small flood control dams is a good example of "prevention". These projects are often more economical and desirable than restoring areas following flooding. Flood control dams were severely tested this year. Not one watershed dam in the district or anywhere else in the country failed to reduce flooding.

A good example of flood protection cost verses benefits was dramatized by the town of Farmville, On June 21 Farmville sustained 3 to 4 million dollars damage to business and industry. Agricultural damage and potential floodwater reducing dams was estimated to be an additional several million dollars. Soil Conservation Service engineers have estimated construction cost of small watershed dams for flood protection per management of waste will be about 1 1/2 million dollars. "It stands to reason" says Jim Blak, spokesman for the Farmville business group, that flood protection on the Upper Appomattox River is economically sound."

Accomplishments

The Robert E. Lee Soil and Water Conservation District was a pioneer in watershed programs, Virginia's first watershed project (Pilot Water - 640) began in Appomattox and Campbell Counties in 1954. Since then three dams were built to protect the Little Falling River floodland in Campbell County, seven dams are complete in Buckingham County with eleven more to be constructed. Plans are complete on Amherst's Buffalo River project. Construction of the four flood control dams is awaiting congressional approval and funding.

The small watershed program has the potential to revitalize rural America. Although flood protection is the main purpose for a watershed program, there are many other benefits. Conservation practices to protect the land from erosion and streams from pollution are emphasized in each watershed project. Soil that does erode and get into the streams is "caught" in flood control reservoirs – keeping the streams clear. The flood control reservoir is normally designed to hold from 50 to 100 years of sediment. Additional water can be impounded for industry or recreation. Watershed lakes are excellent fishery habitat and also attract many of the wild creatures.

Much of the district's energy this year has gone towards restoration work as a result of flooding. Rains created by hurricane Agnes caused the most extensive flooding in the history of the U.S. Even so, most land with good conservation measures withstood the test and were only slightly damaged. Conservationists estimate that rains from Agnes washed away up to 40 tons of soil per acre from cultivated hillsides without adequate conservation measures. Bottomland (except for that below flood control dams), was stripped of its fertile topsoil and sterile sand and rock left in its place, This sand and gravel is spread and mixed with fertile soil to restore it to productivity. Much of the damaged cropland is so severely affected that it will be converted to grassland. To date Soil Conservation Technicians have serviced nearly a thousand requests for technical assistance to restore flood damage within the district.

Ramaging streams ripped up trees, rock and other debris. These upturned trees and rock formed hammocks which reduce the capacity of the stream. With streambanks ripped out, channels choked and gullies through the bottomland, floods came with each subsequent storm, where agricultural bottomland is involved, some of this blockage is being removed and streambanks rebuilt through the REAP cost-share. Plans are being made to unblock streams where flooding would affect the entire community and progaction is needed to protect roads, bridges and houses as well as farmland. A good example of such a community project would be a 2 mile stretch down Wreck Island Creek from the new bridge on 613. Streams are so badly blocked that a normal rainfall produces flooding. Plans are being made to accomplish the work with funds provided by PL 566–Section 216.

Objectives

The control of erosion and the prevention of silitation, safe disposal of storm water and proper management of waste will be prime objectives of the district – actions based on the concept of prevention rather than of cure.

Educational activities to further develop an appreciation for nature and the need for a healthy environment will be stressed. When man appreciates nature, it will be unnatural for him to permit soil erosion, to pollute a stream or to litter. Youth program, tours, and public relations are planned.

Most conservation in the past has been done on voluntary basis. The Board of Directors of the conservation district believe that most needed conservation work can still be accomplished on a voluntary basis. Farmers base their livelihood on productive soil – they can't afford to let it deteriorate. While some farmers still need additional conservation work, the increasing erosion problem is in urbanizing areas. When eroded soil leaves the landowners property and pollutes the stream, it becomes everyone's problem and everyone's business. A locally developed and locally enforced erosion control ordinance should be more acceptable than the proposed state ordinance.

Since 1940 the Robert E. Lee Soil and Water Conservation District has worked for a better environment. Conservation Director, W.M. "John" Fulcher sums up the conservation movement by saying, "To appreciate it now, you would need to have seen it then".

BILLY GRAHAM FILM

Christendom has a key - He is Jesus.

The Steering Committee for the film should be present along with all pastors with at least one layman from their church. Mr. Maynard Marsh, the Billy Graham Film Representative, will meet with us for the purpose of giving guidance in the preparation for the film.

It is expected that approximately 2,000 people will see this film and there will need to be approximately 100 counselors from all the churches to assist those who make decisions for Christ. There will be two counselor training sessions at the Memorial Methodist Church in Appomattox. The training sessions will be from 2:00 to 4:00 p.m. on Sunday, February 25, and March 4. This is an excellent time for church workers and teachers to receive training under the Billy Graham organization. Those serving as counselors may be high school, college, or adults.

"THE INVITATION"
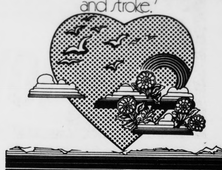
By Rev. Earnie W. Lucas

The public invitation to "come to the front" at the close of a sermon had its beginning in the 1830's, in the evangelism of Charles G. Finney. Today there is much psychological pressure put upon people by many preachers to "come forward". They stress this outward response as being tantamount to, if not identical to coming to Christ. This institutes a condition of salvation which Christ never appointed. Our Lord said in Jn. 6:29, "This is the work of God, that ye believe on Him whom he has sent." Many modern preachers say the work of God, is, "Get up now and come to the front". The scriptural condition in conversion is that man "must repent and believe". God commands men to be baptized as confession of conversion. Scripturally, "coming to Christ" is a spiritual movement; not a physical movement of the body. The evidence of Salvation is a changed life. Not "walking forward". Reported conversions resulted from every sermon that C. H. Spurgeon preached with the exception of one. Mr. Spurgeon did not give "invitation".

A world free from early heart attack and stroke.



That's what we're all about.
